

Sukkot

Sukkot, sometimes called the Festival of Booths, is a week-long harvest holiday during which Jews recall their time in the desert after liberation from slavery in Egypt. During the festival, Jews traditionally eat – and sometimes even sleep – in sukkot (singular: sukkah), temporary huts.

By living out of a transitional shelter, those observing Sukkot are challenged to focus on the truly important aspects of life, rather than the material possessions that often dominate modern existence. Sukkot also provides a meaningful opportunity to connect with nature, represented by the four species of plants that are gathered and waved together: palm, myrtle and willow (collectively called lulav), and citron (etrog).

Sukkot

Sukkot, sometimes called the Festival of Booths, is a week-long harvest holiday during which Jews recall their time in the desert after liberation from slavery in Egypt. During the festival, Jews traditionally eat – and sometimes even sleep – in sukkot (singular: sukkah), temporary huts.

By living out of a transitional shelter, those observing Sukkot are challenged to focus on the truly important aspects of life, rather than the material possessions that often dominate modern existence. Sukkot also provides a meaningful opportunity to connect with nature, represented by the four species of plants that are gathered and waved together: palm, myrtle and willow (collectively called lulav), and citron (etrog).

Sukkot

Sukkot, sometimes called the Festival of Booths, is a week-long harvest holiday during which Jews recall their time in the desert after liberation from slavery in Egypt. During the festival, Jews traditionally eat – and sometimes even sleep – in sukkot (singular: sukkah), temporary huts.

By living out of a transitional shelter, those observing Sukkot are challenged to focus on the truly important aspects of life, rather than the material possessions that often dominate modern existence. Sukkot also provides a meaningful opportunity to connect with nature, represented by the four species of plants that are gathered and waved together: palm, myrtle and willow (collectively called lulav), and citron (etrog).

Sukkot

Sukkot, sometimes called the Festival of Booths, is a week-long harvest holiday during which Jews recall their time in the desert after liberation from slavery in Egypt. During the festival, Jews traditionally eat – and sometimes even sleep – in sukkot (singular: sukkah), temporary huts.

By living out of a transitional shelter, those observing Sukkot are challenged to focus on the truly important aspects of life, rather than the material possessions that often dominate modern existence. Sukkot also provides a meaningful opportunity to connect with nature, represented by the four species of plants that are gathered and waved together: palm, myrtle and willow (collectively called lulav), and citron (etrog).

