

Tu Bishvat

Tu Bishvat is the day on the Jewish calendar set aside for celebrating trees and nature. The holiday was created by the early rabbis as a “birthday” for all trees that would help farmers to mark the age of their saplings for the tithing of their fruit. Later, Jewish mystics came to see Tu Bishvat as relating to the Biblical image of the Tree of Life – and, thus, directly to God.

Today, Tu Bishvat is widely celebrated as a kind of Jewish Earth Day. It is marked by the planting of trees and by a ritual meal, called a seder, featuring a variety of fruits. Increasingly, activists have treated the holiday as both a joyful acknowledgement of creation and a call to action for environmental preservation.

Tu Bishvat

Tu Bishvat is the day on the Jewish calendar set aside for celebrating trees and nature. The holiday was created by the early rabbis as a “birthday” for all trees that would help farmers to mark the age of their saplings for the tithing of their fruit. Later, Jewish mystics came to see Tu Bishvat as relating to the Biblical image of the Tree of Life – and, thus, directly to God.

Today, Tu Bishvat is widely celebrated as a kind of Jewish Earth Day. It is marked by the planting of trees and by a ritual meal, called a seder, featuring a variety of fruits. Increasingly, activists have treated the holiday as both a joyful acknowledgement of creation and a call to action for environmental preservation.

Tu Bishvat

Tu Bishvat is the day on the Jewish calendar set aside for celebrating trees and nature. The holiday was created by the early rabbis as a “birthday” for all trees that would help farmers to mark the age of their saplings for the tithing of their fruit. Later, Jewish mystics came to see Tu Bishvat as relating to the Biblical image of the Tree of Life – and, thus, directly to God.

Today, Tu Bishvat is widely celebrated as a kind of Jewish Earth Day. It is marked by the planting of trees and by a ritual meal, called a seder, featuring a variety of fruits. Increasingly, activists have treated the holiday as both a joyful acknowledgement of creation and a call to action for environmental preservation.

Tu Bishvat

Tu Bishvat is the day on the Jewish calendar set aside for celebrating trees and nature. The holiday was created by the early rabbis as a “birthday” for all trees that would help farmers to mark the age of their saplings for the tithing of their fruit. Later, Jewish mystics came to see Tu Bishvat as relating to the Biblical image of the Tree of Life – and, thus, directly to God.

Today, Tu Bishvat is widely celebrated as a kind of Jewish Earth Day. It is marked by the planting of trees and by a ritual meal, called a seder, featuring a variety of fruits. Increasingly, activists have treated the holiday as both a joyful acknowledgement of creation and a call to action for environmental preservation.

